1 Milestone 4: Data Cleaning and Transformation

Connecting to an API/Pulling in the Data and Cleaning/Formatting

Perform at least 5 data transformation and/or cleansing steps to your API data. The below examples are not required - they are just potential transformations you could do. If your data doesn't work for these scenarios, complete different transformations. You can do the same transformation multiple times if needed to clean your data. The goal is a clean dataset at the end of the milestone. As a reminder - you cannot export your website data to CSV to work with it, you must do all the work directly against the API/JSON source.

Examples:

- Replace Headers.
- Format data into a more readable format.
- Identify outliers and bad data.
- Find duplicates.
- Fix casing or inconsistent values.
- Conduct Fuzzy Matching.

Make sure you clearly number and label each transformation step (Step #1, Step #2, etc.) in your code and describe what it is doing in 1-2 sentences.

2 Ethical implications of data wrangling specific to my data-sources.

For Milestone 4, I used the OMDb API to source movie data and applied several transformations for consistency and analytical value. Fundamental changes included renaming columns for readability, extracting Rotten Tomatoes ratings into a standalone column, removing irrelevant columns (like “Language,” “Poster,” and “Website”), and cleaning up missing values by dropping columns and rows with excessive nulls. Columns like “runtime” were converted to numeric formats, and dates were standardized to datetime, which improved data integrity but introduced risks, such as potential misrepresentation if runtime data was incorrectly parsed or if release dates had missing values that were set to null. All data was acquired following OMDb’s API use guidelines, ensuring ethical access and sourcing. Each step was documented for transparency to mitigate ethical concerns, such as possible biases introduced by removing incomplete rows, ensuring assumptions were recorded to allow a reproducible and ethical data wrangling process.
